Academic libraries often play a key role in the development and passage of open access policies. This poster highlights selected results of a survey of fifty-one institutions that have pursued open access policies.

Institutions

- Public
  - 46%
- Private
  - 54%

Funding

- Less than $5M
  - 14%
- $5M - $10M
  - 19%
- $10M - $25M
  - 15%
- $25M - $50M
  - 8%
- Over $50M
  - 5%

Faculty

- Less than 500
  - 24%
- 500 - 1,499
  - 28%
- 1,500 - 2,999
  - 21%
- Over 3,000
  - 27%

Who Conceived and Promoted the Policy

In general, libraries play a lead role in conceiving the policies, and then assume a supporting role in promoting them in tandem with a designated faculty committee.

Types of Policies

1. “Harvard-style” policy that grants the institution a non-exclusive license to faculty articles, requires deposit in an institutional repository, and offers waivers.
   - 45%
2. Hybrid policy, typically including elements of the Harvard-style model.
   - 28%
3. Statement of encouragement to publish future works open access.
   - 18%

Three Most Common Policy Types

- “Harvard-style” policy that grants the institution a non-exclusive license to faculty articles, requires deposit in an institutional repository, and offers waivers.
- Hybrid policy, typically including elements of the Harvard-style model.
- Statement of encouragement to publish future works open access.

Academic Libraries

- Hybrid
  - 28%
- Statement of encouragement
  - 18%
- Full-time faculty
  - 92%

Why Open Access is Important

- Open access supports public access to research funded by tax dollars.
  - 92%
- Open access promotes access to research by anyone, including the general public.
  - 86%
- Open access enables authors to retain more rights to their work.
  - 84%

Recipes for Success: Open Access Policies and Academic Libraries in North America

The Coalition of Open Access Policy Institutions (COAPI) brings together North American universities with established open access policies and those pursuing such policies. To learn more, visit www.sparc.arl.org/coapi.

Key Strategies for Addressing Faculty Concerns

- Promoting the library’s role in the deposit process and the positive impact of depositing articles in an institutional repository.

Poster Presenters

- Shan Sutton, Oregon State University
- Christine Fruin, University of Florida
- Jere Odell, Indiana University-Purdue University, Indianapolis