Abstract: We present an analysis of the organization of counter-terrorist police strategies, specifically as they are planned and executed by the International Criminal Police Organization (Interpol). It is shown that at the international level between cooperating police agencies, counter-terrorist strategies are driven by concerns over an efficient management of information and its exchange among police. The target of terrorism is thereby (re)defined in a language that can be shared among the world’s police institutions. As such, Interpol and its participating police institutions have ‘de-politicized’ terrorism and stripped it of its ideological-political justifications that create factionalism in the world of international diplomacy. However, these efforts to target terrorism (as crime) at the level of police agencies may not...

Title: Black Nationalism, Homophobia and Treating HIV/AIDS in the African American Community

Author: Lomelle, Anthony John; Battle, Juan

Affiliation: Dept Sociology & Anthropology, Purdue U. West Lafayette, IN 47907 tel: 765-494-4702 fax: 765-496-1475

Descriptors: Homophobia, Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, Black Community, Deviant Behavior, Homosexuality, Black Power, Social Attitudes, Political Attitudes

Abstract: A recent development has been the tripartite imputation of deviancy through the labels of black separatism, black homosexuality, & black homophobia. Each of these categories has become associated with political deviance as each has become a politic of protest in the interest of their respective communities. One claim is that Black Nationalists are more homophobic than other African Americans. Using the national Black Politics Study (N = 1,200), this paper asks if African Americans who identify with Black Nationalism have more negative attitudes toward gay males. Are there other demographic characteristics that influence attitudes toward homosexual males among African Americans? Given what is known about other African American voluntary association, like the black church, will church attendance influence attitudes toward homosexual males? Multivariate analyses show that Black Nationalist commitment does not significantly affect attitudes toward gay males. Increasing age, more education, being female, having greater income, & being urban predict more positive attitudes toward gay males. Among black males, regular church attendance has a significant effect on more positive attitudes toward gay males. Implications of differences among these subpopulations are discussed for explaining African American HIV/AIDS intervention & prevention.

Processing the Request
Dear Murray, Jil:

I am writing from the interlibrary loan department of Indiana University–Purdue University Indianapolis. One of our patrons has requested your 2003 Southern Sociological Society Conference paper, “Soup Kitchens as Subversive Documenting Business: To Feed the Hungry.” Have you published this paper somewhere? If not, would you be willing to send an electronic copy for our patron’s research use?

I appreciate any help you can offer.

Thank you,
Mike Batch
